About Radiator Caps

The Pressurised Cooling System and Ranges of Pressure Caps.

Pressurisation of the cooling system is accomplished by the use of a special design filler neck and a Pressure Cap. A Pressure Cap is a spring loaded cap that maintains a specific pressure within the system on many applications. Most Pressure Caps are equipped with a built-in pressure control (relief) valve which seals off the cooling system from the overflow tube and the atmosphere, thereby permitting the system to pressurise itself automatically as the coolant expands as it is heated. The pressure will not exceed the specified rating of the cap, provided the cap is functioning properly. The maximum cooling efficiency of the engine is reached at the pressure rating of the cap.

The Pressure Cap functions as a safety valve to keep the pressure within the desired safe limits as designed by the vehicle manufacturer. Pressure Caps are designed to operate within a predetermined range:

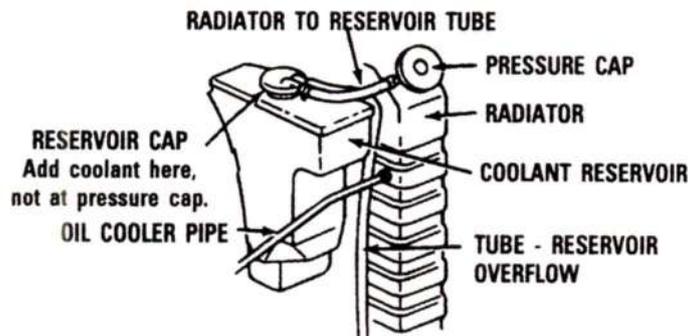

Pressure Marking on Cap	Operating Range	Pressure Marking on Cap	Operating Range
4 lbs.	3.25 lbs. to 4.5 lbs.	15-17 lbs.	14 lbs. to 18 lbs.
7 lbs.	6.5 lbs. to 8 lbs.	18 lbs.	16 lbs. to 20 lbs.
10 lbs.	9 lbs. to 12 lbs.	20 lbs.	18 lbs. to 22 lbs.
13-14 lbs.	12 lbs. to 16lbs.

This means that the pressure valve should not open below the low limit of the range (for e.g. 3.25 lbs. for the 4 lbs. cap) but must open at or below the top limit of the range (for e.g. 4.5 lbs. for a 4 lbs. cap)

Most pressure caps are equipped with a vacuum relief valve which open automatically as the car engine is cooling off, to prevent the formation of a vacuum in the system. This prevents the collapse of radiator upper and lower tanks, hose, etc.

Special Precautions: Never remove a pressure cap quickly from a hot radiator. Such carelessness frequently causes serious burns, since large quantities of steam and boiling water are released. Pressure caps should be removed slowly, always stopping at the mid point position to permit steam to escape slowly and safely.

COOLANT RECOVERY - RESERVE CONSTANT FULL SYSTEM

The increased load placed on cooling Systems by modern automobiles requires more than a pressure cap to adequately cool the engine. By adding a coolant reservoir properly connected to the radiator overflow tube, and a special "Closed System" pressure cap, efficiency is considerably increased.

- * Radiator is kept "full to the top" with no air space.
- * When the coolant expands with increasing temperature, the overflow is saved in the reservoir, to be drawn back into the radiator as the engine cools.

TVS Radiator Caps

OEM Replacement Style and SAFE-T-VENT™ Caps

All TVS Caps are rugged designs requiring no adjustments. All parts in contact with the engine coolant are made of non-corrosive material such as aluminium, stainless steel or commercial quality brass. Special gasket compounds have been developed for the valve which withstand high temperatures and all standard antifreeze/coolant solutions.

Some caps are free to rotate caps, allowing independent movement of neck gasket and valve gasket thereby preventing damage to gaskets during installation and removal. The two extra long ears at the side allows the user to more easily hold the cap during installation and removal.

The caps are designed such that the main valve operates independently with respect to vacuum valve operation. These caps are suitable for older open cooling systems and latest overflow reservoir type systems.

As a result of these cap designs, high quality material and workmanship, Sundram Fasteners Limited is the first to offer a Limited Lifetime Warranty on its after-market cap products.
